

Our Lady of the Lakes Catholic Community

Today's selection from Mark closes a section of the Gospel (3:7-6:6) and by recounting Jesus' rejection by his own people, it ends with a failure even more dramatic than the plots the Pharisees and Herodians began to weave against him. Up to this point in the Gospel, we have heard very little of Jesus' own teaching. Until he told the parable of the sower and the seed, Mark had only told us that Jesus responded to questions and critics and preached the nearness of the kingdom of God. His teaching took place much more through action than words and both his actions and his words demonstrated his unbridled freedom from anything that would constrain the coming of the kingdom of God. Now Jesus appears in his own hometown. Mark tells us that Jesus "astonished" the people of Nazareth. The word "astonish" implies that he aroused intense interest but not necessarily any fealty or even real respect. Rather than provoking hope, Jesus' familiar but challenging presence sparked a series of reservations and questions about him and what made him capable of saying and doing what he did. It's notable that his neighbors didn't ask about the truth or goodness of what he did, but rather about where he got the knowledge, wisdom and power to do it all. The people of Nazareth knew his background and therefore they thought they knew his limits as well as they knew their own. Their problem was the scandal of the Incarnation. As long as God is far off and awesome, it's easy to believe and still avoid the responsibility to be godlike. But when God appears as one of us, the expectations for us to be more become too great. The sad truth seems to be that the very people of Nazareth were the first to question whether anything good could come from Nazareth (John 1:46). Their faith was crippled by their limited expectations. Jesus could work no mighty deeds among them. The scandal of the Incarnation is that God enters our history, speaks our language and can be constrained by our lack of faith. The most frightening and exciting truth about it is that God wants to work miracles in and through our own weakness.

From the Parish Office

I'd like to give to the church, Lord, but you see I'm still in diapers, and I don't have any money of my own. I'm sure you understand.

I'd like to give to the church, Lord, but you see I'm just a toddler, and I haven't learned to count very well yet. I'm sure you understand.

I'd like to give to the church, Lord, but Daddy only gives me a few dollars allowance. And ten percent would be half a dollar. I'm sure you understand.

I'd like to give to the church, Lord, I got a job after school, but Mom says to save the money for college. Though $10 at the movies seems a lot to me I don't want to be the only one not there. I'm sure you understand.

I'd like to give to the church, Lord, but now that I'm on a college scholarship it would seem unfair to give a tithe when some are helping me. I'm sure you understand.

I'd like to give to the church, Lord, but I just got married and setting up a home has to be the number one priority: house and car payments and everything. I'm sure you understand.

I'd like to give to the church, Lord, but you see starting a family is more expensive than I thought, and I never know when I'll be laid off or on a strike. I'm sure you understand.

I'd like to give to the church, Lord, but raising kids and saving for their college education these days is more expensive than ever. My mission's to my kids for the next 10 years. I'm sure you understand.

I'd like to give to the church, Lord, but now that the kids are out on their own, saving for retirement is my priority now, I'm sure you understand.

I'd like to give to the church, Lord, but retirement's come for both of us, and you know what it's like to live on a fixed income. I'm sure you understand.

I'd like to give to the church, Lord, but now the will is drawn up and though I forgot the church, I am sure that my kids will take care of it the way I have always wanted to. I'm sure you understand.
